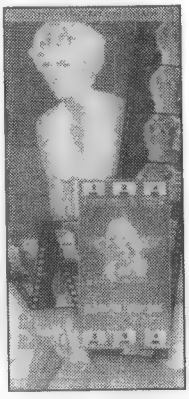
Platinum test-run bonus cards inserted into Bond Volume II by Inkworks

Inkworks accidentally inserted platinum bonus cards into packs of Bond Volume II. The cards were part of a test run of the gold-foil Golden Touch of Bond cards. Fewer than 100 of the cards are known to exist. One card recently changed hands for $250.

Commemorative Monroe ticket series introduced

Another neat memorabilia item has entered the market – this one showcases a photo of a commemorative ticket with photographs of celebrities like Marilyn Monroe and Babe Ruth.



The Collectible Legends Series commemorative tickets, produced by Classic Collectible Products, are housed in a plastic display case.

For example, the Marilyn Monroe Series includes four commemorative tickets, including "The Glamour Girl," "The Movie Star," "The Sex Symbol" and "Now and Forever."

Each commemorative ticket, measuring 8½ x 4 inches, is individually numbered on the back and will have a one-year production run listed.

Priced at $14.99-$16.99 SRP, the series also includes ex-Major League Baseball players Don Mattingly and Roberto Clemente, Major League Soccer, Villanova 1985 NCAA basketball championship, 1987 Orange Bowl and a Vince Lombardi Quote Series.

The company also is pursuing NFL and Jackie Robinson licenses. For more info, call (404) 874-1584.

MARKET REPORT

By Kurt Samuels

Many Mickey Mouse companies producing entertainment cards

Upper Deck, FPG, join Fleer/SkyBox with Disney licenses

There's more than one Mickey Mouse company producing entertainment cards nowadays.

Upper Deck, who has been trying to make a name for itself since re-entering the entertainment card market in 1996, will produce three Disney-related card sets in 1997: a remake of the movie "The Absent Minded Professor," "George of the Jungle," and "The Little Mermaid," (a license Fleer/SkyBox had tentatively scheduled to produce for this year) which will be re-released this fall.

Fleer/SkyBox, which has been producing Disney-related cards since 1991, will release "Hercules," the movie company's latest summer animated feature.

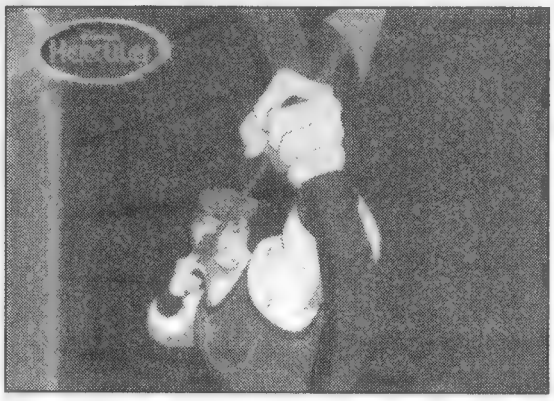
And in 1998, FPG, who's focus had been in the fantasy art field, will produce the card, sticker and game sets for the 1998 scheduled Disney animated film "Tarzan."

With more and more companies looking to get a slice of the Disney pie, it's been a goofy time in deciphering what this all means. Let's break it down by company.

Fleer/SkyBox: First things first, Fleer/SkyBox did not "lose" the Disney license. The company, like ever other who wants to pursue a Disney license, can still negotiate a contract with the company to produce Disney-related cards. And it's something the company plans to continue to do.

"My feeling is that we will still are a major player in the Disney license," Fleer/SkyBox director of entertainment cards Steve Charendoff said. "Our relationship with Disney is still very strong and very healthy. We, as a company, have taken a more conservative approach, being more careful and less carefree on putting product into the market. This then opened the door to others to these properties."

Fleer/SkyBox had been the leading producer in terms of total sets produced in the industry the last three years.



"Entertainment cards are risky. But there are some that are less risky than others. 'Hercules' is a safe risk because it will be heavily promoted and will be seen by every kid and their parents; it is Disney's summer blockbuster."

Steve Charendoff
Fleer/SkyBox director of entertainment cards

In 1994, before the companies merged, they produced 31 total sets. In 1995, the number jumped to 38. In 1996, the total declined to 29. Tentatively, Fleer/SkyBox has 16 sets scheduled for 1997.

"As a company we have decided that it is not in our best interest to market everything that every licensor, including Disney, wants us to take," Charendoff said. "The market is still going through a difficult transitional period and we can't be as carefree and free-wheeling as in the past.

"Entertainment cards are risky. But there are some that are less risky than others. 'Hercules' is a safe risk because it will be heavily promoted and will be seen by every kid and their parents; it is Disney's summer blockbuster. Other films have the potential to be big.

"For instance, 'Toy Story.' No one had an idea it was going to be as big as it was. The trouble is that with movies, you just don't know how big it's going to be.

"'Independence Day' is another good example. I actually read the script a year and a half before the movie came out. And at the time, it would have been a simple process to warehouse that license, but we decided to pass and Topps then took the license.

"As a result, the movie did phenomenally well. Did it provide a big windfall for Topps as a trading card set? Not that I can tell."

Fleer/SkyBox may be conservative in the number of licenses that it acquires, but it will continue to go after licenses it believes will be winners, including Disney releases.

Upper Deck: It was no secret Upper Deck was itching to get back into the entertainment card business back in 1996, despite the slowdown in the entertainment market and that the company had seen poor sales with its Valiant comic and Looney Tunes titles.

But, according to Bruce Regis, vice president of sales and marketing, Upper Deck is now focusing more intently on entertainment cards.

"We view entertainment cards as a viable niche in the market," he said. "We probably didn't get as aggressive as we should have earlier, and probably in our error. But entertainment is something we're in and we want to stay with it."

"Clearly Disney could be considered the centerpiece, but we are looking to expand our portfolio also."

Bruce Regis
Upper Deck vice president of sales and marketing

And there's no way to get back into entertainment fully without acquiring some Disney properties. Disney cards are sold everywhere, from national retail outlets to local mom-and-pop gas stations.

Tens of thousands of cases can actually be produced and sold. For instance, it has been reported that 49,000 cases of Lion King Series I were sold.

Now compare that to the average print run of today's releases, which are less than 1,000 cases each, and one can see the importance Disney plays in this industry.

Thus getting an opportunity to produce cards for Disney is big for Upper Deck, in addition to having a chance to go after other Disney properties.

But Upper Deck is not stopping there, Regis said.

"Clearly Disney could be considered the centerpiece, but we are looking to expand our portfolio also," he said.

FPG: The surprise of this group is FPG, which has produced fantasy art card sets in the past, thus landing next summer's Disney animated film was a real coup for the Pittsburgh-based company, especially when one sees how the license came together.

According to FPG President Michael Friedlander, this is how the license came together: Like Mickey Mouse, Tarzan is a registered, trademarked character. To produce the film, Disney had to license Tarzan from Edgar Rice Burroughs Inc.

Prior to the Disney deal, FPG had entered into an agreement with Burroughs to produce cards and other products featuring Tarzan and other Burroughs characters.

In accordance, Disney has to honor all existing contracts with the Burroughs, leaving FPG clear to produce the Disney Tarzan movie cards (I hope everyone was taking notes; there will be a test on this later).

> "The Disney 'Tarzan' deal gives us a chance to reach new markets and to show those not familiar with our products a chance to see the quality work we produce," Friedlander said. "It should tie-in with many of our future plans."

> FPG president

For Friedlander and FPG, this has been a "wonderful thing" for the company.

"The Disney 'Tarzan' deal gives us a chance to reach new markets and to show those not familiar with our products a chance to see the quality work we produce," Friedlander said.

The comic book character, Groo, finally gets his own card game. Arch Angel will produce a 100-card, seven-dice set that features original artwork by Groo creator Sergio Aragones.

Groo is featured here on a 1995 WildStorm card.

"It should tie-in with many of our future plans."

The "Tarzan" cards are more than just a dream project for Friedlander in the business sense.

Friedlander has been a fan of Tarzan all his life. When he was a kid, Friedlander's parents took lil' Mikey on a cross-country trip to meet Johnny Weismueller, the actor who played Tarzan in films (and if you ever meet Friedlander, he'd be happy to tell you the story).

"It's definitely a dream come true to be able to work on such a film," he said.

Though these three companies have taken different stances in the Disney hunt, all three are looking to achieve the same goal: to produce big-time, successful, money-making card sets.

But even with the mouse on the front and ol' Walt's name on the packaging, that's not always the case. For every "Lion King" and "Toy Story," there's "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," a set that even Charendoff admitted did not sell to expectations (and not just for trading cards, across the board, licensors couldn't get over the hump of Quasimodo).

Still, the chance of huge profits outweigh the risks involved. It will be interesting to see if other trading card companies will go after this license in the future until one company locks it up for good.

It's worth a deuce: It's official. As reported in the last issue of the Market Report, Cornerstone has inked the World's greatest rock 'n' roll band, KISS, to a trading card contract.

According to Cornerstone's Walter Rowan, "We have already begun pre-production and have solicited for sale a nine-card Preview Set for a June release. The Preview Set will consist of die-cut and foil-stamped cards. The first full-blown set will be issued in July, followed by at least one other large set later in the year."

Expect to see a feature story on the making of the KISS set in the next issue of Entertainment Cards.

Game on: One of our favorite comic book characters, Groo, finally gets his own game.

The Groo card game, produced by Arch Angel, is a 100-card, seven-dice set that features all original artwork by Groo creator Sergio Aragones.

According to Arch Angel President Rob Holly, this is how the game is played: "It's just like the comic book," he said. "The idea is to keep Groo out of your town as the player builds a community and create an army. But Groo can always find a way in."

The Groo game carries a suggested retail price of $16.95 and will be available in mid-May. For more information, call (414) 248-7189 and ask for Ken.

Game off: FPG has disbanded its collectible card game line due to lack of sales and a decline in the market.

According to FPG President Michael Friedlander, the company left the collectible card game field due to an overabundance of products in the market, the costs of producing its games and the waning interest of collectible card games in general.

FPG's main game, Guardians, stood out in the collectible card games market due to its brilliant artwork by some of the top fantasy artists, and it's a fun game to play.

You can't have a bad mix if cows, babes and beer are involved.

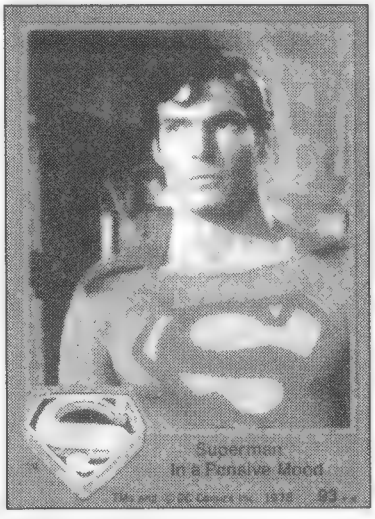
Making the transition

Barb Wire, Batman, Hulk among superheroes moving from comics to films to trading cards

By Kurt Samuels

Hollywood has been said to be a place that makes heroes out of nobodies. It is also the place where heroes are made into even bigger heroes.

Comic book superheroes have been a favorite of Hollywood because of the stories their creators have weaved in those pulp pages and the fan following the characters have.



On both the large and small screens, superheroes have taken flight. And while the on-screen live-action versions don't always reflect their paper twins (Superman without blue hair and Batman's costume with nipples), it's still fun fantasy that keeps people buying tickets or pushing the Nielsen ratings up.

As we know, it's not too surprising that trading cards have followed suit. After all, comics, TV and movie cards are the staples of the industry.

Like the pictures they represent, some of the card sets have been Oscar-like, others have bombed.

What was what and who was who? Here's a list of all the live action movie and TV superhero card sets that the federal government will allows us to tell you about.

Barb Wire
1996 Topps Movie

Dark Horse's babe-for-hire Barb Wire was a success as a trading card set, but not much so as a movie despite having Pamela Lee as the star. Maybe she didn't have enough tattoos. However, it did bring some national notoriety to the obscure comic book character and the company that produced the books.

Batman-Riddler Backs
1966 Topps TV

A 38-card set featuring Adam West and Burt Ward and the rest of the TV "Batman" gang. Cards have black borders and red wall mounts (a first and last for the industry) on the fronts.

Backs contain a caption and "The Riddler's Riddle," riddles that could be deciphered with a decoder that came in every pack. Best captions: "A Nefarious Note" and "A Batly Gesture." You make up the fronts. That is if you can find them. This is the most difficult Batman series to complete.

Batman-Bat Laffs
1966 Topps TV

Released later in the same year as the Riddler backs, the Bat Laffs series has 55 cards. Backs have a puzzle piece and a "Bat Laff" joke, though none of the Laffs are as funny as Ward's tell-all book about the show. The final 22 cards in the series were double-printed, thus are easier to find than the first 33.

Batman
1989 Topps Movie

Two sets containing 132 cards and 22 stickers each (that's 264 cards and 44 stickers total for those that are adding impaired).

The differences between the two series is that the first has white borders, the second has yellow. In addition a factory set of both series was produced, with all the cards and stickers, plus 11 bonus cards in each series.

The bonus cards in the first series, featuring movie storyboard drawings, make this series the most exciting of the four versions.

Batman Returns-Stadium Club
1992 Topps Movie

The first of the high-end entertainment cards, Topps used the same design that made its baseball and football counterparts so popular. At first, the cards were quite popular, having a full-bleed photo on glossy white stock and prices for boxes were above the $50 range.

But after the movie faded and collectors and dealers realized there were so much of the product unsold, box and pack prices dropped dramatically. Thus the $30 set when first released can be had for half that price now. Despite the price drop, the set is still one of the best designed movie sets ever produced.

Batman Returns
1992 Topps Movie

An 88-card series with 10 Stadium Club chase cards make up this cardboard set. Highlights, of course, are the cards of Michelle Pfieffer in her Catwoman suit and the front captions. And at less than 70 cents a pack when originally released, the series was worth the price.

Batman Forever
1995 Fleer Movie

Batman changed from Michael Keaton to Val Kilmer, thus the card license changed from Topps to Fleer. Overall, the quality is on-line with that of Stadium Club (kudos to Fleer for not including the Batman butt-shot in this set. If you've seen the movie, you know what I'm talking about), with the best bets being the publicity photos.

Backs are well written. One thing: Don't get this set confused with Batman Forever Metal, one of the worst looking sets in the history of trading cards with poor art magnified by the "metal" printing process. Stay away from this overpriced, ugly set.

Howard the Duck
1986 Topps Movie

Maybe the world wasn't quite ready for this cigar smoking duck detective when it hit the box office because this film died faster than Daffy during hunting season. Though the Marvel comic book was quite successful prior to the film's release, after the movie bombed, so did the comic.

Incredible Hulk 1979 Topps TV

It's not easy being green, as Kermit the Frog and David Banner both know. The Incredible Hulk became one of the few Marvel Comics characters that actually didn't flop when it became a live-action figure (unlike Spider-Man, the Fantastic Four and Howard the Duck).

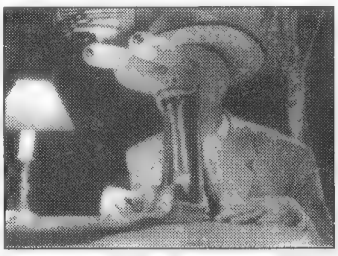
The 88-card, 22-sticker set features scenes from the show, surrounded in a green (naturally) border with an infamous Topps caption across the bottom. Backs are mostly puzzle pieces, though 10 have TV facts instead. Best caption: "No! It can't happen now!"

Lois & Clark
1995 SkyBox TV

Something went terribly wrong with the production of this set as SkyBox produced some of the ugliest looking live-action TV cards ever produced. The screen grabs are blurry, the color registration has too much red and the "enhancements" of the grabs make the actors look more like clowns. This is one scary set.

The Mask
1994 Cardz Movie

A more comical version of Stanley Ipkiss' maniacal alter ego was portrayed by Jim Carrey in this special effect-driven film. The flick was pure eye candy with dazzling graphics and computer-generated effects. Carrey was perfect for the role which required a more visual performance than acting talent. Cardz did a good job in capturing all the key scenes in the set.



The Shadow
1994 Topps Movie

This 90-card sets includes 10 Shadow Legends and four Topps Finest cards. The first 70 cards of the series feature scenes from the film while the last 20 plus the Legends feature artwork from the original pulp magazines and the comic book series and is the highlight of this series (especially the work by Mike Kaluta).

Note: Some of the Legends art, which was created by Jim Steranko, can be scene in the artist's set from FPG.

Supergirl
1983 Topps Movie

To capture the male card collectors and the female sticker collectors with one set, Topps combined the two features into this one set. The card fronts feature storyline from the film or a puzzle while the backs were a sticker. It didn't really matter; the film bombed and the cards were overproduced and are still readily available.

Superman
1978 Topps Movie

A total of 165 cards and 28 stickers were involved in this two-series set. The set is a mixture of publicity stills (some of the worst ever produced, like the one where it looks like Margot Kidder is trying to stick a pen in her nose; card No. 116) and actual movie scenes.

First series (numbered 1-77) cards have a white border, while the second series cards (numbered 78-165) have red borders, with the backs a mixture of puzzle cards and movie facts.

The stickers make this set difficult to complete (people actually used the stickers for their intended purposes rather than saving them in plastic sheets, those animals!). But the film was a blockbuster and Topps produced thousands of cases, making it easy to locate.

Superman II
1981 Topps Movie

Only one series this time for the Man of Steel, this 88-card, 22-sticker set goes with the red border fronts with puzzle pieces, movie facts and information on the backs.

Highlighting this set are the 10 Kryptonian Crystal Bank Archives cards which give information on the main characters in the movie sequel. But like all Topps sets of this time, the real excitement are the captions. The winners of this set: "The Fastest Boyfriend on Earth" (#32) and "Belted by a Bully" (#57). As Topps executive Gary Gerani once said, there is an art to writing the card captions.

Superman III
1983 Topps Movie

The third and final Topps Superman set was also the most attractive in design. Black borders surrounded by a yellow frame, the cards stood out when compared to that repulsive red border Topps used in the past. It was also the first of the Superman sets not to feature puzzle backs on the cards (that was left for the backs of the 22 stickers), instead featuring story lines and a picture. While its not one of the greatest movie sets, it's my favorite of the Superman titles.

Tank Girl
1995 Comic Images Movie

Lori Petty starred in this short-lived film about a girl and her tank (duh) in a film that was Generation X's version of Road Warrior, except water is king, not gas as the Mel Gibson flick. The cards are nice and the backs tell the film's story, except on three cards where write-ups were interrupted in mid-sentence. Besides that great flaw, the series is what one expects from a movie card series. Not flashy but a nice review.

Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles
1990 Topps Movie

Explain this to me: How can one of the slowest animals on earth become ninja masters? Am I the only one who sees this and goes "what?" In any event, the set is typical Topps. Movie photos with caption on the front with text on the back. The series has 132 cads and 11 stickers. There was also a deluxe set produced which was on better card stock, but didn't have the 11 stickers. There are only six behind the scenes cards. This set could have used much more.

Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles II: The Secret of the Ooze
1991 Topps Movie

They're back, but on 33 less cards. To keep with the ooze theme, the card front design has a canister across the top with a green ooze dripping down the left border of the card. There are also 11 stickers, but no deluxe set. Like the first series, plenty of this set is still available in large quantities at very cheap prices. Expect to find complete sets for $5 or under.

Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles III
1993 Topps Movie

Topps unveils the first "gallery" cards in this series' artwork done by comic artists interpreting the characters. Some of the artists include Keith Giffen, Mark Nelson and Dave Dorman.

The other 76 cards in the set feature a white border with a bamboo frame. There are 11 stickers.

When one thinks about it, it is truly amazing there are only these sets that have turned from comic book heroes to live action pieces.

Others, like Wonder Woman, never made it on cards though they were popular series. As for the future, Inkworks has plans to produce Men in Black based on the Malibu Comic and the upcoming movie, while Fleer will have a new set for the upcoming Batman movie.

But as long as Hollywood likes heroes, comic book characters will always have a home.

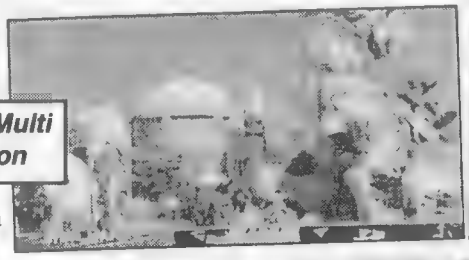
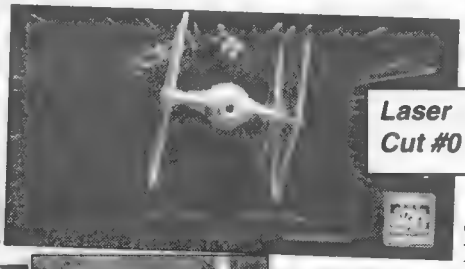
Topps supplies collectors with more Star Wars bonus cards

20th Anniversary magazine includes three movie cards

Star Wars, Star Wars and more Star Wars. The Trilogy collectors can't get enough, even though Topps is doing its best to give them what they want.

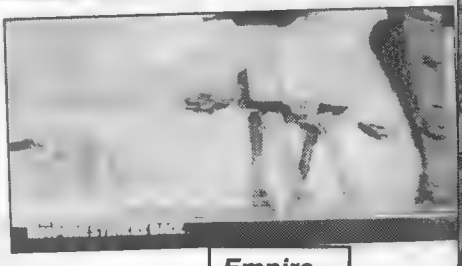


3-D Multi Motion

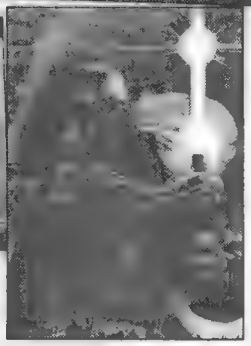


Laser Cut #0

The 20th Anniversary Star Wars Commemorative Magazine included three cards poly bagged with the issue. An Empire Strikes Back 3-D promo card numbered P1, Star Wars Trilogy Laser Cut card #0 and Star Wars Trilogy Multi Motion card numbered 2m were showcased.



Empire 3-D card



Simonson Gallery

As a side note, don't pay any attention to the back of the Empire Strikes Back 3-D card which states that a 3-D set based on the movie will be coming in summer 1997. According to Topps' Jonathan Michael Baylis, the company pulled the plug on this project.

➤ Star Wars Galaxy Magazine #11 Deluxe Collector's Edition, which ships in April, will have two Star Wars cards polybagged with it in direct market editions only.

Polybagged will be a Walter Simonson Gallery card (No. C4) featuring his cover art and exclusive Star Wars Metal Tech prototype card.

DuoCards, Market Square both win 3 Stooges licenses

Scratch Sony Signatures from "Licensor of the Year" balloting. The former owner of the Three Stooges license sold the license to two different companies within months of each other, and DuoCards and Market Square Productions will each be releasing Three Stooges card sets in April and June, respectively.

"Neither one of us (DuoCards and Market Square) knew this was happening until it was too late," Market Square Productions director of marketing Bob Michelucci said. "I've been talking with (DuoCards) to make sure we don't have the same images (in the sets).

"We are working with one another as to not step on each other's toes. I knew our deal was non-exclusive, but I didn't realize that they were actually licensing card sets to two companies at the same time."

DuoCards received the license last last year; Market Square was given the go-ahead early this year. Early contracts for each company were signed with Sony, while Comedy III Productions took over the Three Stooges licensing late last year and finished the deals.

By the time DuoCards and Market Square figured out they were on the same path, it was too late for either to change plans.

Alan Gordon, president of DuoCards' sister company Comic Images, was upset because "we were not told by anyone that (Market Square) was given a license. Market Square did a mailing and one of our distributors got it and asked what was going on.

"To not be up front and not told was not right. It's an incredibly greedy licensor who doesn't understand the nuances of the market and doesn't care about the consumers or the money they have to spend."

DuoCards' set will feature 72 cards, with a pair of inserts: Three Die-Cut Stooges Monument cards (1:15) and three Chromium Antic cards (1:15). Seven-card packs carry an SRP of $1.99.

Market Square will produce three sets – a 30-card set (5,000 issued, $14.95 SRP), Gold Foil Signature set with 30 base cards and nine replica gold foil signature cards (500, $24.95) and Super Deluxe set with 30 base cards, three gold foil signature sets and three exclusive cards (500, $84.95) all housed in a color collectors carton. For more information, call Market Square at (412) 471-1511.

Remaining 5 Star Trek: First Contact candy bar wrappers announced

The mystery of the remaining five wrappers in the Canadian Leaf Hollywood "Star Trek: First Contact" candy bar series, which we featured last issue, has been solved.

According to Entertainment Cards readers George White of Top Dog Marketing in Chapel Hill, N.C., and Dan Williams of Virginia Beach, the six wrappers are: 1. Captain Picard, 2. Riker, 3. Worf, 4. Geordi La Forge, 5. Troi and 6. Dr. Crusher.

Williams also said the candy bars were also released in the United States, and were plentiful in his area.

In addition to the six wrappers, there are seven different chocolate molds featuring seven different aliens which means there are 42 different combinations. The bars were created by November, Lazar, Scher, which formerly did work with Donruss and SkyBox.

'SNL' spoof: Chewbacca playing with Milwaukee

A recent "Saturday Night Live" broadcast included a spoof of home shopping networks.

Before they "sold" Mark Hamill, "SNL" showed a card from a set called "Star Wars if they were in the major leagues."

The card had Chewbacca in a Milwaukee Brewers uniform on a "Binnacle" trading card – an obvious knockoff of Pinnacle, a sports cards manufacturer.

Said Pinnacle's Kurt Iverson, "I guess they thought they had to change the name, but, heck, they just should've asked. We were glad to see the Pinnacle logo on 'SNL.'"

Star Wars motion cards produced for Doritos

A six-card lenticular Star Wars card set was produced for Doritos, with one inserted in each specially marked bag.

Scenes from the Trilogy were included on the motion cards. Here's one tip: Make sure you lick off your fingers before you touch the cards.

THE CARD SHARK

By Max Gottfried

Looney Tunes, Mask, Batman oddball sets hit the market

Welcome to the debut of a new column devoted to trading cards found in unusual places. Food premiums, candy inserts, packaging promos, mail-aways, etc.

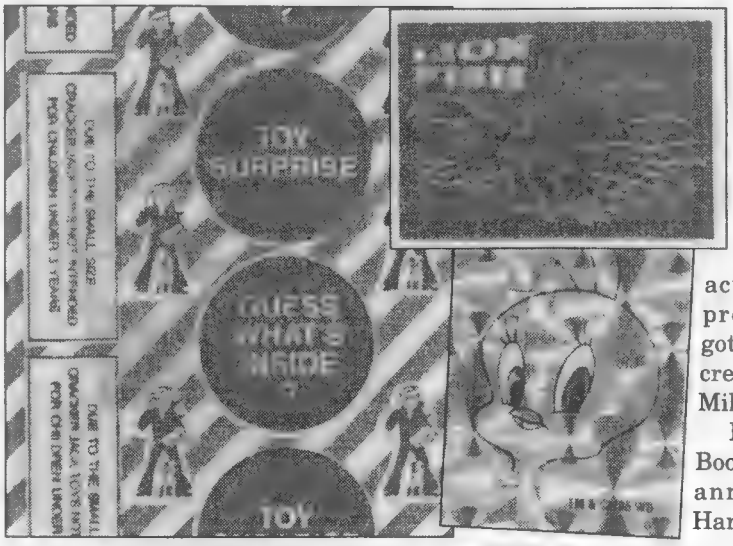
The Card Shark is your guide into this world of card treasures, so mind your manners, stay in line and no chewing gum.

Candy-coated popcorn, peanuts and cards: That legendary confection, Cracker Jack, has something else to make mouths water.

Card collectors can enjoy an assortment of trading card prizes found in specially marked boxes. In 1992, Topps supplied miniature baseball cards, but recently found were "Creatures of the Deep" Glow-in-the dark cards. Eight mini cards measuring 1¼ x 1¾ inches are randomly inserted.

The fronts feature a full-color illustration with highlights of "glow" material. The backs have factual information about the sea critter.

When the lights are out, the fish glow. Another eight mini-card set features the Looney Tunes characters. This one is of the prismatic sticker variety and has key phrases of the characters, "I tawt I taw a puddy tat!?"



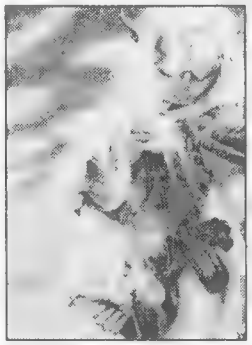
"Creatures of the Deep" and Looney Tunes prisms, both eight-card sets, were prizes inside Cracker Jacks.

Only 100 of these Vampirella stickers were produced and given to blood donors at the Comic Book Extravaganza Annual Blood Drive.

Spaced out is another Cracker Jack prize, which is a collection of eight holographic mini-stickers.

Unconventional convention cards: It's the season of summer card and comic conventions. Quite often these gatherings have special cards produced just for the purpose of promotion.

Comic Images produced popular card sets of Joseph Michael Linsner and Animal Mystic. But did you know that publisher Sirius Entertainment produced two special giveaway cards of Dawn and Jatarri? They were available only at the Heroes Convention in North Carolina.

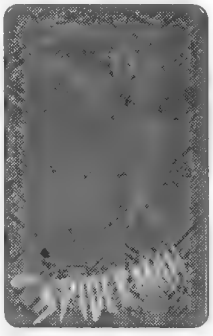


Sirius produced two special cards of Dawn and Jatarri which were available only at the Heroes Convention in North Carolina.

Another company, Ground Zero Comics, produced its own 20-card set featuring their wild characters available through comic stores across America. But the promo/chase cards were gotten at conventions that creators, Dan Parsons and Mike Wolfer attended.

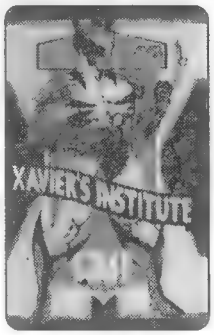
Each year the Comic Book Extravaganza hosts an annual blood drive with Harris Comics. Not sold, but given freely, was a full-color sticker featuring Vampirella. This sticker, limited to only 100, was available only to blood donors.

Marvel wallet cards: They look like credit cards. They feel like credit cards. Found in Waldenbook stores are an assortment or plastic Wallet cards with snazzy pictures of Marvel Superheroes.

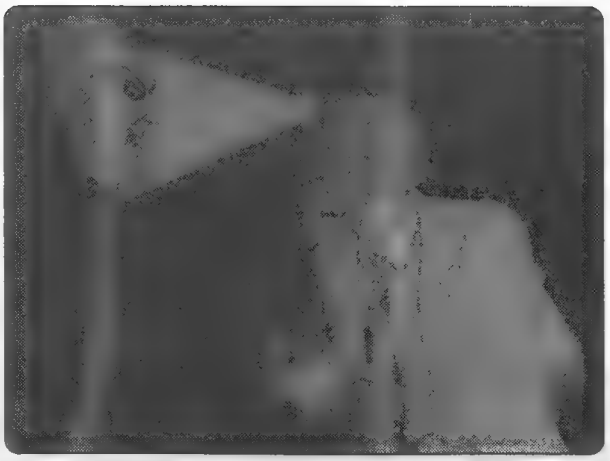


The front has a full-color depiction of Spider-Man or Wolverine, while the backs have bio material on your own staff ID number. Hey, don't leave home without it.

Hold that Mask: While we wait for the Inkworks release of "The Mask" animated trading cards, you'll be happy to know of another set you might have missed.



Our friends from merry ol' England produced a set of lenticular cards featuring the antics of the animated "Mask." New Line Cinema liked this wicked widgets set enough to give 'em away to pedestrians at the New York Licensing Show. Smokin'!



Mask Wicked Widgets lenticular cards were given away at the New York Licensing Show.

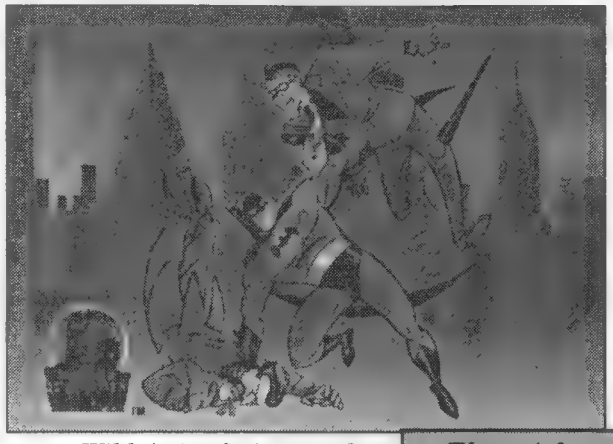
Strictly high Caliber cards: One of the few comic companies to actively promote their publications through trading cards is Caliber.

Its line of creator-owned comics is slated for the more mature reader with sophisticated artwork and stories. A variety of trading cards showcasing its comics are distributed at comic conventions or by comic stores for promotional purposes.

Door Man, The Apparition, Moebius Comics and Wordsmith are just a few of the cards produced.

Baby Wild Animals from Topps: There are certain cards which are destined for certain mass markets. This is one of them.

Found in pharmacies, convenience stores and mass merchandisers, Baby Wild Animals is aimed at the juvenile market. Manufactured by Topps, each colorful package contains: A toy baby wild animal, family album file, habitat card and a candy baby bottle. Twenty-four completes your collection of "Brownie," "Hoppy" and the rest. They're fun for kids.

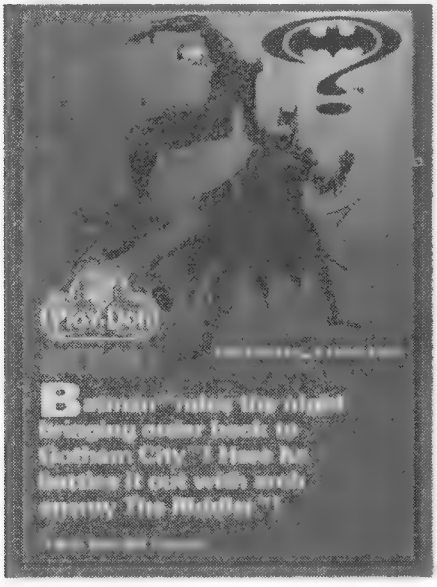


The Adventures of Batman and Robin cards are printed two per specially marked box of Eskimo Pies. There are 12 cards in the set.

Food and toys with cards attached: While you bulk up on the Eskimo Pie ice cream you can collect all 12 Batman and Robin Animated cards taken from the packages.

If you can part with cutting up the cardboard, you can then redeem the coupon and three proof-of-purchase for the dozen. Unlike the previous Spider-Man card promotion, these babies are produced by Fleer/SkyBox.

Batman also shows up on the packaging of Play-Doh in the form of Collector Card No. 1. Don't sweat it, the company only made one card.



Batman Forever was featured on card No. 1 in the Play-Doh Heroes series. Unfortunately, this was the only card produced.

Baby Wild Animals from Topps includes 24 cards, candy, family album file and toy.

Jakks Toys recently debuted their WWF wrestling figures at the International Toy Fair. Of special note to comic fans, these cards, which are part of the packaging, are illustrated by comic artist Guy Dorian.

Each box of Brach's gummy bear-like Batman Candy comes with two character milk caps per panel.

While the box states "Collect all six sets," the Card Shark has only surfaced with three sets (six milk caps in total) ... and brother I've eaten my share of boxes. Don't take my word for it, ask my dentist.

News & Notes

• Boston Red Sox star Mo Vaughn may wind up in court over a dispute with a company that produced phone cards bearing his likeness, according an article in the Boston Globe.

In 1995, Vaughn entered into a one-year deal with Omnitel Inc. Vaughn allowed Omnitel to use his image on the card and his voice on a special message heard when using the card. In return, Omnitel was going to pay Vaughn a $7,500 fee along with royalties, which Vaughn, in turn, planned on donating to his youth foundation.

According to the report, Mark Gillam, Vaughn's business manager, reports that Vaughn only received $2,000 of his fee. In addition, Gillam's office began receiving complaints that the phone cards were not working.

Gillam said Vaughn may sue Omnitel over the matter if it's not resolved.

• The Second International Phone Card Fair is scheduled for Athens, Greece. The dates of the event are June 7-8. For information, call 0049/89/8632689.
